The Index is arranged in one alphabet which includes all author entries, subject entries and such title entries as have been considered necessary.

The same information, including paging, is given for all entries, author, subject and title, except for title entries for the same work occurring in several collections, when reference is made from title to author: e.g. Dream children; a reverie. See Lamb, C.

Material under an author is arranged as follows:

1. Author's works
2. Works about the author. When both works by and about an author are included, the works about him are listed under the heading About
3. Criticism of an individual work by the author under the heading About individual works. An example follows:

Galsworthy, John
American and Briton
In Addresses in America p11-44
Another sheaf p88-111
Chamberlain, E. ed Essays old and new p141-50
Witham, R. A. comp Essays of today p238-53
Yale R ns 8:18

PREFACE

The publication of the Essay Index in what is to be the final form of its basic volume marks the last step in a large bibliographic undertaking which, from the time of the inception of the idea in the mind of its principal editor, Minnie Earl Sears, through the period of preliminary planning and preparation by that editor and the later period of the actual making of the Index by Marian Shaw and the editing of that indexing by Miss Sears, has covered the greater part of a decade of intensive organization and labor. Under other circumstances the preface to this volume would naturally have been written by the editor who planned and supervised it, and only that editor could have written a preface which would give a full picture of what the ten years' work involved. Miss Sears' death in November 1933 left the writing of the prefatory material to two different hands. Her co-editor, Marian Shaw, to whose devotion to the project and capacity for accurate cataloging of a high order the actual indexing is due, has written the Introduction, while this present Preface on the purpose and use of the Index is written by one who has been in sympathetic touch with the plan from its very beginning and who has made frequent and appreciative use of its results as these were made available in the six preliminary parts published 1931-1933.

Like many other large undertakings the Essay Index had some of its roots in the past. Its most important predecessor in the field, which is still useful after more than a generation has elapsed since the publication of its original edition, was the well-known A.L.A. Index to General Literature, an attempt to do for composite books of the 19th century what Poole's Index had so successfully done for the periodical literature of the same century. Both of these older indexes belonged to the period when subject indexing was stressed at the expense of author indexing, and both suffer from the same two defects, inseparable from the indexing work of that period, that is, the absence of author indexing and the use of catch-word subjects rather than the regular catalog subject headings now in general use. In its second enlarged edition the A.L.A. Index covers books published to the end of the 19th century, and an attempt to provide a similar indexing on more modern lines for works of the early 20th century was made in the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature which, in its cumulated volumes for 1905-1914 and in its Supplement 1907-1915 included indexing of some 652 composite books published since 1900. This indexing of books in the Readers' Guide was discontinued after 1914 on the theory that the analysis of such material to be included in the Standard Catalog projected by the publisher of the Readers' Guide would take its place. Much analysis of this sort was actually included in the Standard Catalog, particularly in the analytical indexes which were made a special feature of that catalog after Miss Sears became its general editor, but it soon became evident that the restriction in size of that catalog which was inseparable from its basic plan would not permit the indexing of all essays and composite works which would have an added value if so indexed. To meet that need the present Essay Index grew, first as an idea in the mind of the general editor of the Standard Catalog, and later as a definite response to encouragements toward the making of such an index received from many librarians who felt the need of a modern index of 20th century publications to cover books which had been issued during the first quarter of the century and which, if not so indexed, would have to be given expensive and laborious indexing in many card catalogs throughout the country. To complete this picture of the antecedents of the Essay Index note should be made of the fact that the Supplement to the A.L.A. Index, covering the ten years 1900-1910, had been issued and a further supplement was in contemplation. When the larger plans for the Essay Index became definite the A.L.A. Publishing Board abandoned its plans for a second supplement and generously turned over to the Essay Index such information and lists as it had already collected.

This brief account of the evolution of the Essay Index suggests the question of its use in relation to the various antecedent works, and an examination of these shows that all, in varying degrees and ways, are still useful and must still be used for certain kinds of material, in spite of the large plan of the Essay Index. Between the main volume of the A.L.A. Index and the Essay Index the line of demarcation is plain, as the first indexes books published during the 19th century while the second covers books published since 1900. This distinction in date applies only to dates of publication of the works indexed and not to dates of the essayists themselves, as some indexing of older essayists, such as Addison, Lamb, Macaulay, etc., will be found in the Essay Index when writings of such essayists are included in collections published since 1900. This inclusion of earlier material in the Essay Index should be kept in mind by the reference librarian who is trying to find all copies of a popular essay which is much in demand. Part of the material indexed in the Supplement to the A.L.A. Index has been taken over by the Essay Index and re-indexed there fully by author and subject, when this material was of the true essay type, but not all of the works covered by that Supplement have been thus re-indexed, so that Supplement is still useful, particularly for the travel material which it includes. Of the 652 books covered by the indexing in the Readers' Guide, some 164 were found to be appropriate for inclusion in the Essay Index and are indexed there, but the remaining 488 have not been reindexed, so for that number, again largely travel and other non-essay types, the indexing in the Readers' Guide is still to be used. To some extent the analytical indexing in the Standard Catalog is duplicated in the Essay Index, but much more is not duplicated, and the Standard Catalog will therefore furnish many analyticals, particularly outside the fields of literature and literary criticism, which do not appear in the Essay Index. While the Essay Index will be by far the most important popular reference tool for work within its field, that field can be extended by the right understanding of the extent to which these earlier indexes are still to be used. For 20th century material alone the A.L.A. Supplement, Readers' Guide and Standard Catalog will add the indexing of more than 1000 books to the 2144 volumes covered by the Essay Index.

Special Uses. A complete author and subject catalog of nearly 40,000 items will have many different uses in more than one department of a library. Some of the minor and perhaps now unsuspected uses may develop only as it is found to meet this or that emergency in some particular place. At three strategic points in library work its great usefulness is so evident, however, as to call for some comment in this preface. These three points are: (1) the selection of books either for original purchase or for retention when the question of the retention of inactive material is under consideration, (2) Cataloging economy, and (3) Reference use of a great body of material which without such an index would fail to serve at many points where it would be particularly useful.

Selection of Books. The list of books indexed furnishes an admirable guide to the selection of the most worthwhile material of the essay and composite-book type published during the last thirty-three years. Carefully made in the first place, this list was checked and rechecked by experienced librarians who knew both the books themselves and their actual and potential use in libraries of different types and sizes. These cooperating librarians rejected some titles as perhaps less worth indexing and added many others not on the original list which experience had shown to be worth indexing for some value or element of usefulness in the contents. The resulting list of 2144 volumes represents the consensus of opinion of more than fifty experienced librarians. For selection of books, however, the list has another value besides its indication of the quality of the individual books listed. As every librarian knows, a book which is worthwhile in itself is made doubly useful for practical purposes if it is so indexed that its otherwise buried contents may be readily accessible when need arises. As a buying guide, therefore, the list of books indexed furnishes perhaps as practical an aid as can be made for the selection of books of this type which are either of more than ephemeral value in themselves or useful for reference purposes because fully indexed.

For this purpose the list should be useful for more than the original purchase of books. In many public libraries the question of the discarding or preservation of books which are no longer in active circulation, or are beginning to wear out, is at times vital. But a book which no longer circulates may, if its subject matter is fully indexed, be still of importance for its possible reference use, and the fact that such a book is listed as indexed in the Essay Index may help an assistant in charge of discards to decide whether a book is to be retained or, if worn out, to be replaced or rebound. During the process of making the Essay Index more than one librarian made the suggestion that some special stamp or label might be provided by which either the books themselves or their shelf list cards could be marked as "Indexed in Essay Index." Such a suggestion is a practical one which is perhaps already in use in many libraries. The fact that the list of books indexed is available in separate pamphlet form, as well as in the Index itself, facilitates its use for these various "selection of books" purposes.

Cataloging. The most important use of the Essay Index, so self-evident as hardly to need comment, is its money-saving and time-saving value as a substitute for expensive and laborious analysis of books in a library's own card catalog. In an earlier article the writer of this preface, speaking of Miss Sears' work on the Essay Index, has said that it "was based on one of the points in her cataloging creed on which she always felt very strongly, that is, the economic waste of analyzing in individual card catalogs material which could be analyzed once for all in a printed catalog or index." Every catalog-executive knows that the cost of full cataloging of an individual item is never measured by the physical size of the item. The full author and subject cataloging of an essay on the Brontës, for example, would cost practically as much as similar cataloging of a two volume work on the same subject by the same author. For books indexed in the Essay Index all such analysis can be saved by the use of the Index as an adjunct to the library's own catalog. For the less well equipped library it will, moreover, furnish a more expert analysis of the material than could be made by an only moderately good cataloger. Some idea of the actual money saving made possible by such use of the Index can be gained from the mere number of items covered. The Index gives author and subject analysis for nearly 40,000 essays and parts of books. A library of 40,000 titles would be a fair sized library and the complete cataloging of such a library would take several years of a cataloger's time, if done as fully and well as the analysis in the Essay Index is done. How many entries would be needed for such cataloging has not been ascertained, but as some at least of the essays indexed call for more than one subject entry, to say nothing of the author entries, the number of cards that would have to be made and filed (thus swelling the bulk of the catalog and increasing the number of cases needed to contain the cards) would probably not be far short of 100,000. To the harassed the Index, in order to save space. It has not been used for authors having two or more books included, as such an arrangement would necessitate using several alphabets under a given author, which would prove a hindrance to easy reference use.

1. Author entries. Under an author's name will be found (1st) author's works; (2d) works about the author, preceded by the heading "About" when both works by and about him are included; (3d) criticisms of an individual work by an author, under the heading "About individual works." This third grouping has been made as an aid in reference work because the Index includes much literary criticism of individual works and this is often either difficult to find or practically lost if such individual criticism is buried in the midst of the general entries about an author.

2. Subject entries. Subject entries have been made freely—the Index contains approximately 40,000 of them. The Library of Congress subject headings have been used as a basis for the subject work, supplemented when necessary by additional headings. The user of the Index will need to distinguish between the various kinds of material entered under the same subject. The same heading sometimes covers material which is of real reference value, as well as material which may be of a light and often humorous type.

3. Title entries. Title entries have been made rather sparingly because the consensus of opinion was that they could be omitted to a large extent on account of the minute subject analysis. They have been made for some outstanding titles and occasionally a title entry has been made to take the place of a subject entry as the best way of showing the subject of the essay, but ordinarily entry under title or catchword has not been made.

4. Additional information. Essays which appeared under various titles have been listed under one title in both author and subject entries for the essay in question, with a reference from each title under which it was published. An example of this kind of entry will be found under Addison, Joseph. Nicolini and the lions. It is possible that some exceptions to this rule may be found. Texts have been compared in so far as feasible for the purpose of identifying essays published under various titles, but it is still possible that not all changes of title have been discovered, even though considerable time has been spent on this part of the work, during the compilation of this cumulative volume. When an essay has been found to be only a part of the original essay, the term "Selection from" has been added after the title. Sometimes an essay has proven to be a selection from a longer essay originally published under another title. This difference has also been designated by adding the original title after the term "Selection from." In cases where the same title has been used for entirely different essays, the term "another essay" has been added after the title of the second essay.

Beginning with Part 2 of the Index, references to periodicals were added when the material indexed had also appeared in this form. In such cases only the first page of the reference has been given. Since these periodical references are given only under author entries, it will be necessary when using a subject entry to turn to the author entry for periodical information. Although the decision to add these periodical references was not made until after Part 1 was published these references have now also been made for the material in that section, and have been incorporated into this combined volume.

Selection of Titles Included. We are greatly indebted to a number of libraries for their valuable aid in selecting titles to be indexed and in advising on many doubtful points. The selection of titles indexed is based on a list voted on by 49 collaborating libraries of various types and sizes. A list of these collaborating libraries will be found following this Introduction. This list of about 1500 titles which was sent out in 1929 was made up from various sources. Since 1927 a list of titles which might be indexed had been in process of formation at The H. W. Wilson Company. Many lists were checked and many books examined with this in view. A number of libraries interested in the project contributed suggestive lists, and, in addition, the American Library Association kindly turned over to us lists of titles which had been suggested for inclusion in the proposed new supplement to its Index to General Literature, which they generously gave up in view of our proposed index. When this combined list was checked by the libraries in 1929, additional suggestions were made. A large proportion of the titles included on the original list were elected for inclusion. Several shorter lists, made up from suggestions, were also checked later by collaborating libraries. While proceeding with the indexing of older books, current books were also included, as they were published, thus filling in the gap between 1929, the date of the original list, and the present time. Many of these current titles were kindly suggested to us by various librarians. As work proceeded it was found that a fairly large proportion of the earlier books voted on for inclusion were out of print. A list of these out of print titles was submitted to about 150 libraries of various sizes and types, asking about the advisability of including them. There was an overwhelming vote in favor of including the desirable and useful books, regardless of the fact that they were out of print. Many libraries had them and in any case a book in print today may be out of print tomorrow, so that, eventually, many of the books included will be out of print.

List of Books Indexed. This will be found at the back of the volume, following the Index itself. Upon the advice of several librarians, it was decided that it was preferable to place this long list at the back in this large volume. Wide margins and space between columns, as well as extra space between the several title entries under an author, have been made in order that libraries so desiring may have sufficient space for inserting call numbers. Out of print books are marked "o.p. 1933." A separate reprint of the List, which may be used for buying or checklist purposes, is sent to subscribers with each copy of the Index.

Acknowledgments. Sincere thanks are extended to the many librarians who thruout the period of the preparation of the Index have generously cooperated by answering questionnaires, by checking lists of titles and suggesting additional titles for inclusion, and by giving helpful advice on various questions that arose from time to time. Grateful acknowledgment is made to the members of the editorial staff of the Standard Catalog who have helped in the indexing at various times, and to Iris Almy who has given valuable assistance in the work of compiling this cumulative volume. Credit is given to Esther Rothman for her faithful and efficient assistance in the detailed clerical part of the work, as well as in the proofreading, and to Ethel Jopp, who has ably assisted her. The assistance given by Sadie Knople Brachfeld in the work of obtaining necessary information from the publishers as regards the books included in the Index, is much appreciated.

Thanks are also extended to the publishers who have kindly cooperated by giving us copies of a large proportion of the books which are indexed in this volume.

Directions for Use

The Index is arranged in one alphabet which includes all author entries, subject entries and such title entries as have been considered necessary.

The same information, including paging, is given for all entries, author, subject and title, except for title entries for the same work occurring in several collections, when reference is made from title to author: e.g. Dream children; a reverie. See Lamb, C.

Material under an author is arranged as follows:

1. Author's works
2. Works about the author. When both works by and about an author are included, the works about him are listed under the heading About
3. Criticism of an individual work by the author under the heading About individual works. An example follows:

Galsworthy, John
American and Briton
In Addresses in America p11-44
Another sheaf p88-111
Chamberlain, E. ed Essays old and new p141-50
Witham, R. A. comp Essays of today p238-53
